It's challenging for aspiring entrepreneurs to find the right tools and exposure that help them start their careers.

A study conducted by ICAR-NAARM found that 78% of the participants expressed interest in entrepreneurship, but more than half lacked exposure to entrepreneurial activities. Their motivation stems from passion and independence, with most coming from farming families. Despite high motivation, students from tier II, III, and IV cities and rural areas face significant hurdles, causing their entrepreneurial dreams to falter.
